save middlesex philosophy

Bullying managers at Middlesex University have suspended two philosophy professors and several philosophy students for the 'crime' of campaigning to save their own jobs and courses.

The suspensions come in the wake of international outrage at plans by Middlesex managers to shut down the university's world renowned philosophy centre. They say philosophy makes 'no measurable contribution' to their profits.

Students occupied the Mansion Building at Middlesex's Trent Park campus for 12 days in protest at the closure decision. Now the university bosses are threatening to suspend every student involved in this peaceful sit-in protest.

We must not let these bullies get away with trashing Middlesex University's academic reputation, shutting down successful departments and intimidating those who stand up to them.

Sign below to demand that managers reinstate professors Peter Osborne and Peter Hallward, reinstate the suspended students and lift the threats against Middlesex's philosophy department.
